

Dear Sadiq Khan, others.

As winter draws in and temperature drops the homeless will be in more need of money for a hostel for the night, usually around twelve pounds for each night.

Taking inspiration from Japan's capsule hotels is there any way we could implement this for those on the streets of London, an image is enclosed here:

I know boroughs may be thinking this will increase the number of homeless people in their area, it will at the same time reduce begging by removing the need for the homeless to raise money for a hostel.

In order to prevent misuse key access codes could be used, with an organisation like shelter generating the codes to each capsule and providing them to a service user.

Thanks,
Rob Brew
